Michael's images have been made in exceptionally beautiful parts of Scotland, often well off the beaten track. Michael currently uses a large format view camera (a good old fashioned box with a lens, and a dark cloth) which gives the photographer complete control over the perspective and detail within the image. The depth, colour, tonal range and detail of the images can only be conveyed when you see the prints in person. All images are printed on exhibition quality archival paper.
